Internet Prank Looks For New Victim

The popular website PostcardsForMom.com has announced that they are once again looking for a new 'victim' for their wild prank.

For seven months, The Postcard Project provided entertainment, confusion and happiness to Celeste Shepp, a teacher's aide who lives in Winfield, Missouri. Then a Mom named Betty, from Maryland, became the site's target.

Will Hanke, a professional web designer and the Postcard Project creator, says now it's time for a new victim. "I'm looking for someone who has a Mom with a great sense of humor, and would enjoy a few hundred pieces of mail from fun-loving strangers".

The website recruits generous people from around the world to send a simple postcard to the unsuspecting victim, usually with a simple note or message – perhaps claiming to have known them for years, went to school together, or even hung out at the beach just last week. The main rule of the site is to not mention the website, so the victim has no idea where all the mail is coming from, thus adding to the confusion and fun.
